About the Cover

Zorro (Spanish for "fox"), the character created in 1919 by New York-based pulp writer Johnston McCulley, has been featured in numerous books, films, television series, and other media. The character has undergone changes through the years, but the image of a dashing black-clad masked outlaw who protected citizens of Alta California against tyrannical officials and other villains has remained constant since his first screen appearance in 1920. Kathe Gust looks at the the costumes worn by film and TV actors who have portrayed him in her article, "The Many Faces of Zorro" starting on page 20,
